arrived.

I had started the evening before and took I had started the evening before and took the same train at Richmond. I shall never forget the puzzled look of Judge Davis when I entered the smoking compartment of the sleeper. He said a little gruffly:
"Going South, eh!"
"Yes," I replied; "perhaps to Charleston, S. C."
This seemed to reassure him, and he began chatting away on the topics of the

This seemed to reassure him, and he began chatting away on the topics of the bour in a very pleasant way. He was in charming spirits, and although he had enjoyed little sieep the previous night looked bright and fresh, as might be expected of a bridegroom. When he had talked Judge Otto to sieep he retired to another portion of the car and pulled out a small paper-covered novel and read.

The Prince of Wates Not Coming.

When it was announced, a short time since, that the Prince of Wales contemplated a visit to America, and especially to the United States, the manager of the Louisville Southern Cotton Exposition sent him an invitation to visit Louisville during the Exposition. To-day the following re-"A WHIMSICAL WOOTNG."

He was absorbed in this book for two hours, and I was a little curious to know what it was. Soon afterward another cigar threw us together again, and I was amused to see the title of a little translation from the Italian, entitled "A Whimsirate at Weldon, as he would then change for Raleigh. I said I thought I would change for that point, too, the company was so excellent.

"O!" said he, suspicion once more clouding his kindly eyes. "I thought you were going to Charleston?"
"So I am after I transact some other dient ss for the Times down there." Well, we were going on to Fayetteville," said he.

"So am I," said I, and then I told him wholly useless for us to go; it was to be strictly private, at a country house; no one would be admitted, and there was a ferocious buildog, always unted, in the grounds. But his buoyant spirits soon returned, and his gentle ways and good-humored converse again enlivened the tedious journey. Nor did he again mention the subject of his approaching marriage, except to once more chuckle at Loudoun county, was standing in front of

The number of these animals required for the occasion may be surmised from the fact that the Minister of the Imperial Household has issued an order to engage twelve hundred volunteers as engage twelve hundred volunteers as stablemen in addition to the regular men in the employment. Thirty-six glided closed carriages and four glided open carriages are to be sent to Moscow for the occasion. These vehicles must of course be more imposing than comfortable, since they mostly belong to the style of carriage made a century, and even more, ago. Most of them were constructed in the beginning of the eighteenth century, while others were made in the reigns of while others were made in the reigns of Alexander I. and Nicholas I. The old capital of Russia is to display the greatest hospitality on that occasion. All the numerous monasteries, all private houses, are undergoing repairs in order to offer accommodation to the expected guests. None of the persons summoned for the occasion to Moscow by the imperial decree are to be quartered in hotels; the houses of the movility, of the notables, and of the dignitaries of the Church are open to those. The Metropolitans of St Petersburg and of Kief, who are to crown the Czar, are to have a spleudid set of rooms in the two large historic monasteries of Moscow, and likewise will be accommodated the other twelve prelates who are to officiate at the coronation. The nobles of the Government of Moscow, in council assembled, have decided to offer the traditionary bread and salt to the monarch on a plate which is to cost 5,000 rubles. They have resolved to give a ball to the Emperor, at which, to avoid a crowd, but 2,700 persons will be present, though the hall of the House of the Nobility in Moscow may easily contain over 4,000 guests. Fifteen thousand rubles have been voted for the decoration of the ball-room, as much more for the restoration of furniture, and, all expenses considered, the ball to be given by the nobility is very likely to cost 100,000 rubles, which sum will be levied as a self-imposed tax from the income of the landed proprietors of the Government of Moscow, who are all eager to extend their baspitality to the Czar and Czartza.
